In honor of St. Patricks Day, here's a hearty corned beef and cabbage recipe — an easy way to bring a little Irish cheer to your kitchen.This recipe is foolproof and delicious!

Ingredients

4 pounds corned beef brisket
2 cloves garlic, smashed and peeled seasoning packet, included with the corned beef brisket
1½ pounds baby red skinned potatoes, halved if large
4 large carrots, peeled and cut into 1-inch pieces
1 yellow onion, halved and sliced vertically
1 small head cabbage, cut into wedges with the root intact

Instructions

Rinse your corned beef well and pat dry with paper towel.
Place the brisket in a large stock pot with smashed garlic, pickling seasoning and cover with at least 12 cups of water, leaving a few inches at the top of the pot.
Cover and bring to a near boil. Then reduce to a simmer and cook for 50 minute per pound. (4 pound brisket will take approximately 3-1/2 hours)
I usually check on it 1/3 of the way and add more water and turn the corned beef.
When 30 minutes are remaining; add potatoes, carrots, onions and cover with the wedges of cabbage.
The vegetables are done when a fork glides through easily.
Once the corned beef is cookied, remove and transfer to a carving board.
Slice the corned beef against the grain.
Serve the boiled vegetables with butter, salt and pepper, and I love to dip my corned beef in mustard.

How Other Cities Prepare for Disasters

As this is written (late January) there are predictions of a major winter storm hitting the Midwest, South and East, and I'm reminded of the years I lived in the suburbs of Philadelphia. There was no danger of earthquakes there, but every few years there would be a significant snowfall, and the ways in which the people in the area would respond makes for an interesting (and in some cases, amusing) story.

First off, you must understand that many years see little or no heavy snowstorms in Philadelphia, followed by one that puts a couple of feet on the ground. That means that Philadelphians are never ready for the first big storm that comes along, and their reaction can be a little bizarre. Let me take you through the usual sequence of events.

When the first snow is predicted huge crowds of people, apparently convinced that the end of the world is approaching, will rush out and buy up all the eggs, milk and bread they can find. A local news columnist once called this the Great French Toast Festival.

On the day the storm is predicted the local all-news radio station begins a breathless sky-watch. Eventually a snowflake is spotted, and drivers (who have, of course, forgotten how to drive in the snow) go a little crazy.

As the first traces of snow begin to collect on the roads 75 percent of the drivers on the major highways immediately slow down to 10 mph. Fifteen percent try to maintain normal speeds, weaving around the slow drivers and cursing at them.
And the final ten percent drive immediately to the middles of their assigned intersections and abandon their vehicles, assuring maximum gridlock.
I'm exaggerating a bit here, but not by a great deal. Those of you who have lived in snow country can relate, I'm sure.

VIEU 新闻

其他城市如何为灾害做准备

写下这篇文章时（1 月下旬），人们正预测一场重大的冬季风暴将袭击美国中西部、南部和东部，这让我想起了我曾经居住在费城郊区的那些年。那里没有地震的危险，但每隔几年就会遭遇一次严重的降雪，而当地人应对这种情况的方式，构成了一个既有趣、在某些情况下甚至相当滑稽的故事。

首先你必须明白，费城很多年份几乎没有或根本没有大暴雪，而接下来的一次却可能一下子在地面上堆积起几英尺厚的积雪。这就意味着，费城人从来没有为第一场大雪做好准备，他们的反应有时会显得相当古怪。让我带你看看通常会发生的一系列情况。

在预测暴风雪到来的那一天，当地的全天新闻广播电台开始紧张兮兮地进行“盯天观测”。终于，有人发现了一片雪花，而司机们（当然，早已忘记如何在雪地里开车）便开始有些失控。

当道路上开始出现第一层薄薄的积雪时，75% 的高速公路司机立刻把车速降到每小时 10 英里。15% 的人试图保持正常车速，在慢车之间穿梭，对他们破口大骂。

而最后的 10% 则直接把车开到各自路口的正中央，弃车而去，确保交通完全瘫痪。

我在这里稍微有点夸张，但其实也没有夸大多少。我相信，那些住过多雪地区的人一定能感同身受。

COMMUNITY ANNOUNCEMENT

Thank you to our outgoing Men's & Women's Club hosts and organizers, Nancy, Judy and Pam for the incredible energy, care, and creativity you poured into our community. From organizing memorable dinners to hosting our Thanksgiving celebration, music nights, and countless other gatherings, you helped create a space where people felt welcome, connected, and joyful. Your hard work made a real difference, and we're deeply grateful.

Congratulations to the new incoming team as you step into this role. We're excited for your fresh ideas, enthusiasm, and community spirit you'll bring. Here's to building on a wonderful foundation and creating even more great moments together.

After serving as editor of our community newsletter beginning Oct. 2022, I'll be stepping down from the role. It has been a joy to help keep everyone informed, highlight our events, and celebrate the spirit of this community. I'm grateful for the support, ideas, and encouragement so many of you have shared along the way. April will be my final issue as editor.

With that in mind, we're now looking for someone interested in taking on the editor position and helping shape the next chapter of the newsletter. If you or someone you know feels inspired to take on this role, I'd be glad to walk you through how to get started or create your own version of the newsletter. Please contact me at missionbaynews@gmail.com or contact the community administrator, Shannon Howard to express your interest.

March Gardening Tips

This is a great time to get out in the garden. There's much to plant — from a grand finale of cool-season flowers and vegetables (such as escarole, shown) to an early show from summer heat lovers.

Get ready to plant. Prepare flower and vegetable beds by adding at least 2 or 3 inches of organic matter, along with a complete fertilizer, and dig it all in to a depth of 10 inches or so. For big shrubs and trees, take the time to dig a substantial planting hole — at least several inches wider and deeper than the plant's root ball. Do advance work to make sure the soil is moist enough. For hard, dryish soil that's tough to work, start by digging as deep as you can and fill the hole with water, let it soak in and then refill it; repeat this over a couple of days until you can push your spade to the desired depth.

Last chance for cool-season performers. In cooler coastal climates, there's still time to put in winter-spring performers: annual flowers such as pansies, Iceland poppies, stock and violas; and vegetables such as lettuce (quick-maturing varieties), spinach and other cool-season crops.

Finish bare-root planting. Early in the month, you can still plant bare-root roses, fruit trees, berries and such.

Start planting warm-weather flowers and vegetables. In inland climates where the weather heats up early, especially in Southern California, plant marigolds, petunias, lobelia and other warm-weather annuals. Also set out or sow seeds of beans, squash and other summer crops; you can plant tomatoes if the danger of frost has passed. Closer to the coast or the San Francisco Bay, wait until warmer weather in April for most heat lovers.

Start drought-resistant perennials. While the weather is still relatively cool, it's a good time to set out penstemon, artemisia, catmint (nepeta), sage, coreopsis and other perennials that need little water; they can establish themselves before hot weather.

Feeding time. Scatter, sprinkle or spray all-purpose food for shrubs, trees and ground covers — ideally before the main surge of spring growth. Feed roses after pruning. Feed camellias after bloom.

Watch for pests. Aphids are fond of succulent new growth. Start with gentle methods such as washing them off with a blast of water from the hose. As a next step, move on to organically based sprays.

Simple Rules for Planting the Perfect Spring Garden

from waysidegardens.com

As important as the right plants are, they can't do ALL the work for you. A great garden still requires a lot of preparation and maintenance to develop. Before you begin planting in the spring, here is a checklist of steps you should take to prepare your garden for a successful season:

Clear Out Weeds, Mulch, and Debris

Do a spring cleaning of the area, removing anything in the way until you are back to the bare soil. Dead organic matter can go on the compost pile to break down. Well-composted mulch or organic matter can stay right where it is to be incorporated into the soil, but "fresh" mulch needs to be raked away to expose the soil.

Your main concern is any weeds that might still be alive. These must be removed from the soil and either burned or placed in the middle of a working compost pile where the heat will kill it before any seeds can germinate. You don't want to leave any living weeds around, or they might come back and try to compete with your garden plants!

Prune

Many trees or shrubs can use a good pruning this time of year, especially those that bloom on new wood. Late winter/early spring is the perfect time to prune back old wood because you can see the branch structure well and you can shape the plant before the buds break dormancy and the plant starts investing energy in its branches. Some of the plants you want to prune at this time of year are: buddleia (butterfly bush), cornus canadensis (flowering dogwood), lonicera (honeysuckle), hydrangea paniculata, cercis (redbud), summer-blooming spirea, lagerstroemia (crepe myrtle), rose, and wisteria. Early spring is also the perfect time to prune and shape woody ornamentals.

Before you go snip-happy, though, there are a couple of things to consider. First you should use a clean rag and some isopropyl alcohol to sterilize your pruners before each cut. This precaution keeps you from inadvertently spreading plant disease all around the garden. You wouldn't want a surgeon cutting into you without sterilizing the blade first, would you? Secondly, there are many plants that you should NOT prune at this time of year because they bloom on old wood. Plants that you should wait until after the bloom season to prune include: spring-blooming Spirea, Camellia, Rhododendron (including Azalea), Forsythia, Hydrangea Macrophylla (Bigleaf), Syringa (Lilac), Magnolia, Kalmia (Mountain Laurel), and Weigela.

Whenever you prune your plants, it is a good practice to add a little fertilizer to the soil to ensure that the plant has the nutrients on hand to heal its wounds quickly.

Prepare the Soil

Once the frost has lifted and the soil is workable, start preparing your garden beds. In winter, soil tends to become compacted, so the first thing you want to do is loosen it back up by tilling or turning it. Using a tiller or a sharp spade, work the soil to a depth of 12 to 14 inches to loosen it up. Any mulch or leaf litter that is well-composted should be mixed right in, but if it is too fresh, you should remove it first.

Next add compost and amendments. You can use a soil test to see where you pH and nutrient levels are, which will tell you what type of materials you might want to add. If you have poor or clay-based soil, it is especially important to add a healthy layer of compost to improve the soil's texture, nutrient content, and moisture-retention. Then rake the soil level and water it lightly to help it settle and release air pockets.

If your existing soil is particularly poor, the easiest option might just be to rise above it with a raised garden bed.

Early Planting

Get the first wave of planting done. Many plants can be started indoors this time of year for planting out in spring, and particularly hardy vegetables (onions, potatoes, artichokes, and some lettuces) are ready to be planted now. Look at the plant information for whatever you intend to plant.

Bulbs and Perennials tend to be straightforward to plant—it's really just dig, drop, done! Dig the hole at the proper depth and spacing, add any soil amendments necessary, add the bulb/root ball and be sure that the crown is right at soil level, then fill in the hole and water thoroughly.

With Trees and Shrubs, here is a tip to help those roots settle in to their new home: the moat method. Again you should dig a hole plenty large and wide enough to accommodate the plant's roots, and add a cone of amended soil for the roots to rest on, then fill in the hole with more amended soil. But before you water in, create a ring of soil around the plant a bit wider than the original hole. This ring will act like a berm while you water the plant in, allowing you to really get the deep saturation necessary without turning the whole area into a mud pit.

Apply Mulch

Last but not least, apply a thick layer of mulch wherever you can. Mulch is much more effective at keeping weeds from becoming established if you can get it in place before the weeds start sprouting. You might still be waiting to plant out in lots of areas, or you might have seeds germinating that you don't want to bury in mulch. You can avoid a lot of this conflict if you have already started your seedlings indoors, if you are working around established plants, or if you buy well-established plants in the nursery. Just don't wait too long to mulch an area, or the weeds will beat you there!
