It's Quiet — For Now

The magnitude 7.7 – 7.9 earthquake that struck Myanmar on March 28 killed thousands of people. It damaged or destroyed hundreds of thousands of homes, as well as houses of worship, hospitals, bridges, dams and a major highway.

The response was poor at best, as the ruling military junta and the ongoing civil war impeded rescue efforts.

As with many developing countries, poor and poorly-enforced building codes contributed to the suffering. In Thailand a 30-story skyscraper collapsed, triggering a scandal.

In the U.S., things have been relatively quiet for the 30 days preceding the writing of this column (late April), the lone exception being a 5.2 temblor northeast of San Diego on April 4, which caused little damage.

Perhaps of more interest to us is flooding. We've talked about sea level rise and tsunamis, concluding that tsunamis are unlikely to affect us very much, mostly because we're so far from the Golden Gate, and that flooding from sea level rise is probably decades away. But there is one other danger: Mission Bay was built on filled land, and is kept dry with constant pumping. As I understand it, those pumps are driven electrically, with a diesel backup. A few years ago there was a problem with the plumbing to the pumps, and water was as much as a foot deep on some streets.

If a widespread disaster compromises the pumps or shuts off our electricity for more then a few days, things could get messy around here.

Just something to think about.

目前还算平静

3月28日袭击缅甸的7.7至7.9级地震造成了数千人死亡，成千上万的住宅遭到破坏或摧毁，宗教场所、医院、桥梁、水坝和一条主要高速公路也未能幸免。

应对工作充其量只能说是糟糕，因为统治政权是军政府，加上正在进行的内战，严重阻碍了救援工作。

和许多发展中国家一样，建设规范的缺失以及执行不力也加剧了灾难带来的苦难。在泰国，一座30层的摩天大楼倒塌，引发了一场丑闻。

在美国，情况相对平静，在本文写作前的30天内（四月下旬），唯一的例外是4月4日在圣迭戈东北方向发生的5.2级地震，但几乎没有造成破坏。

也许对我们来说，更值得关注的是洪水。我们曾经讨论过海平面上升和海啸的影响，并得出结论：由于我们距离金门大桥很远，海啸不太可能对我们产生严重影响；而海平面上升带来的洪水问题可能要几十年后才会显现。但还有一个潜在的危险：使命湾是建在填海土地上的，依赖持续抽水保持干燥。据我了解，那些抽水泵是由电力驱动的，并配有柴油备用装置。几年前，抽水设备的管路出现了问题，一些街道的积水曾深达一英尺。

如果一场大范围的灾难破坏了抽水系统，或者让我们断电好几天，那这里的情况可能会变得非常糟糕。

只是提供一些值得思考的内容。

What Are the Best Pets for Seniors?

America has long been known as a pet-loving nation. According to a National Pet Owners Survey, 70% of U.S. households own a pet. The National Poll on Healthy Aging, conducted by the University of Michigan, reports that 55% of adults 50 and older have pets.

Older adults and pets just go together. Pet ownership can help battle senior mobility limitations, health issues and low energy that can keep them isolated. Especially in seniors who live alone, social isolation can lead to loneliness, depression and poor physical health, but companion pets for seniors can help alleviate these maladies.

Learn why seniors should consider owning a pet, what to know when thinking about a pet, and which are the best pets for seniors.

Why Should Seniors Have Pets?

Pets can contribute to the well-being of seniors. According to the Michigan study, older pet owners reported that having a pet:

Helped them enjoy life (88%)
Made them feel loved (86%)
Reduced stress (79%)
Provided a sense of purpose (73%)
Connected them with others (65%)
Encouraged physical activity (64%)

Pets can also help with safety, protection and creating and maintaining routine.

The pandemic only accelerated pet ownership among seniors, with 10% reporting getting a new pet between March 2020 and January 2021, according to the Michigan study.

What Should Seniors Consider When Thinking About a Pet?

Many factors go into deciding what is the best pet for seniors You should consider whether a pet fits your lifestyle, your needs, your home and your caring abilities. For example, seniors who use wheelchairs or are confined to bed might have difficulty with any pet that requires a lot of maintenance.
Here are some more points to consider:

Are you physically capable of caring for a pet? Will you remain capable long term?

Can you dedicate enough time to keep your pet happy and healthy?

Do you have support to care for your pet if you are unable to?

Is the cost of a pet manageable, including food, medical care, training and toys?

What size pet can your home and physical ability accommodate?

Will you be able to manage just one pet or more?

If you've made the decision to get a pet, look first into adopting from a local animal shelter. The ASPCA says that about 6.3 million pets are placed into shelters every year, and 4.1 million are adopted. These animals need companionship as much as seniors do.

What Are the Best Pets for Seniors?

Dog

Dogs are by far the most popular pets in the United States. The APPA National Pet Owners Survey says almost 70% of pet owners have a dog.

Dogs are the choice of many people because they are affectionate, loyal, protective, helpful, playful and love attention. The downside is that many dogs need a lot of care and exercise. Some dogs are also more likely to trigger allergies.

Cat

Cats come in second with pet owners, according to the APPA survey, at 43%. Cats are more independent and need a little less looking after, but they have their demands, too. Cats need space and a warm lap to occupy.

Fish

Fish are a surprising third most favorite choice for pet owners, with 14.7% saying they have either a freshwater or saltwater fish, according to the APPA survey. Fish are relaxing to watch and care for, making them a great choice for seniors.

Fish are very low-maintenance, requiring only a bowl or a tank. They need only food and a good tank cleaning now and then. The top expense will be the equipment for its living space.

Others

Rabbits, hamsters, gerbils, mice and ferrets can have short lifespans or can live as long as dogs and cats. They all require routine care, food, company and protection. Some of these animals may be nocturnal so won't make as good a companion during the day.

Consider whether there are other pets in your household that can be a threat to these small animals.

Robotic

Here's an unexpected choice for some seniors – robotic pets. For seniors with dementia, robotic pets that look and behave like their live counterparts can be a source of comfort without any maintenance at all. They can be cuddled and can interact with seniors.

Joy For All Companion Therapy Pets for Alzheimer's

Companion Pets are designed to bring comfort, companionship and fun to elder loved ones. With realistic fur and pet-like sounds - and sensors that respond to petting and hugs with familiar pet-like actions.

Therapy pets have a remarkable effect on women (and men) in the middle and later stages of Alzheimer's disease. They are calming, soothing and bring the person back to a time in their life when they felt useful and had a sense of purpose; when caring for a young family member was the #1 priority. Alzheimer's pet therapy helps patients escape from a world where someone is always caring for them.

10 Things Retirees Should Stop Spending On Now

By Bruce Horovitz, AARP

Say goodbye to second cars, warehouse stores and other no-longer-necessary expenses

Retirement is a time to rethink some things: how we fill our hours and days, what we do for fun and fulfillment. And, maybe, all that stuff we've been spending money on for years.

You may have needed that stuff back then, for family or work. But you're not going to the office anymore, and the kids have moved out (probably). Now is the time to take a hard look at some of the goods and services you buy and decide which ones you really need (or which ones have cheaper alternatives). Here are 10 things to consider culling from your retirement budget.

1. New clothes and accessories

If you were a white-collar worker, it's a good bet your closets and dressers are packed with office attire collected over decades. You hardly need this stuff anymore, let alone more of it.

If you do want to supplement your wardrobe, smart-shopping expert Trae Bodge recommends skipping boutiques and department stores in favor of second-hand shops. To save even more, she says, "shop your closet" — it's probably full of clothes you rarely or never wear that can feel new when you dig them out.

Bodge does something like this twice a year, seasonally switching out clothes from her closet. "Inevitably, I find things I forgot about," she says. "I can hide some from myself one winter and feel like I have a new wardrobe the next winter."

2. Pricey gifts

Buying birthday and holiday gifts for your grandchildren may give you as much pleasure as it gives them, and we're not suggesting you stop. But retirement might be a "time to dial that way back," says Bodge.

Consider being a little less lavish in your giving, especially as the grandkids get older and it gets harder to know what to get them. Rather than buying something expensive that might fall flat, Bodge recommends giving gift cards or a modest amount of cash so they can get what they want. Such giving doesn't have to be generic. Shopping sites such as Gift Card Granny, PerfectGift.com and Giftcards.com let you create personalized gift cards adorned with a memorable photo—perhaps one from a vacation you took with your grandchild—and a brief message.

3. Collectibles

Many retirees have amassed collections from once-keen hobbies that now sit around taking up space. How much time do you spend cataloging those rare coins, rearranging the Hummel figurines or playing with your toy trains? Do you really need any more of them?

Let retirement be a time to stop expanding your collection and start looking for its future home. For example, Bodge's father, an avid collector of jazz books and records, plans to donate his collection to a local library after he dies.

4. Warehouse store memberships

When you were tending to a house full of kids, buying groceries and other household items in bulk at wholesale clubs might have been budget-smart. Now that you're an empty nester, those big sacks and giant jugs of kitchen staples are as likely as not to get stale or spoil before you finish them.

In that case, those bulk discounts — and the annual membership fees you pay to get them — may be a waste of money.

"Look at your shopping habits," says budgeting expert Andrea Woroch. "Our daughter went to school in September, and we realized we have less people eating here now." She suggests ditching your Costco, Sam's Club or BJ's membership and buying smaller quantities at a local supermarket.

5. Books

Love ink on paper but still shelling out bucks for books? Bobbi Rebell, a certified financial planner and author of Launching Financial Grownups, suggests getting your reading fix for free by checking out books at your local library instead. "You still support authors by borrowing from the library," she adds, because libraries are likely to buy more copies of popular writers' work.

You can also browse newspapers and magazines, saving more by shedding subscriptions. And many libraries lend ebooks and audiobooks through online services like Libby and Hoopla.

6. Peak-season travel

Years ago, you may have been stuck taking vacations during peak periods aligned with your children's spring, summer or winter breaks from school, when prices for flights, hotels and rental cars are typically at their highest. Now that you're not tied to the school schedule, there's a simple solution, Rebell says: "Don't go on vacation when college kids are on vacation." Travel instead in the fall, when schools are in session and temperatures are still comfortable.

7. Multiple vehicles

It's common for working spouses to need their own cars for commuting, but retirees "don't have the same obligations of being in the office or attending work meetings," Woroch says. Translation: Now could be an opportune time for your household to downsize to one vehicle. In addition to making money by selling the spare car, you'll reduce your vehicle maintenance and auto insurance costs.

8. Family cellphone plans

Still paying for a family cellular plan even though your kids are now grownups? You're not alone. More than one-third of millennials (ages 29 to 44), and even 1 in 7 Gen Xers (ages 45 to 60), say they're still on their parents' cellular plan, according to a recent survey by WhistleOut, a cellphone plan comparison website.

That doesn't come cheap: On average, a four-person family plan with unlimited data from a major carrier costs around $200 a month, plus taxes and fees, according to NerdWallet.
Woroch says reducing the number of phone lines on your plan can yield significant savings. Tell your adult kids to get their own service plans. But give them advance notice so they have time to budget for this new cost, etiquette expert Lizzie Post suggests.

9. Garden centers and florists

When you walk into a flower shop or garden center, the greenery always looks so beautiful. What's not so attractive are the price tags. Don't stop buying plants and flowers if they bring you joy, but you can find cheaper places to get them, says Bodge. Try budget-conscious retailers like Trader Joe's, Lidl, Ikea or Home Depot.

Another option is to grow your own. You can also save on gardening expenses by shopping at discount chains rather than nurseries. Pro tip: Some cities and counties have programs offering free mulch or garden-equipment rentals. See what your local government offers.

10. Property maintenance services

When you were working full time, you didn't want to spend your weekends scrubbing floors or cutting the grass, especially when you had family demands like sports games, birthday parties and religious activities. Hiring a housecleaner, gardener or other home service providers might have made sense.

Now, you probably have more time on your hands. If you're in good health and have the stamina for it, Woroch suggests taking on chores like housecleaning and lawn maintenance to save money. These regular tasks can also be good forms of exercise.
